By clicking “I Agree,” I ACKNOWLEDGE I HAVE READ AND UNDERSTAND THE TERMS PRESENTED BELOW, AND UNDERSTAND THE RISKS AND BENEFITS OF TELEHEALTH, AND BY ACCEPTING THESE TERMS OF USE I HEREBY GIVE MY INFORMED CONSENT TO PARTICIPATE IN TELEHEALTH UNDER THESE TERMS.

What is Telehealth?

Telehealth is the delivery of healthcare services, including examination, consultation, diagnosis, and treatment, through electronic communication technologies when you (the patient) are located in a different location than your healthcare provider. ReviveHealth allows you to receive medical and/or mental health treatment from a qualified provider without having to travel to another location or schedule a separate appointment. This helps you avoid long waiting times that you might otherwise experience at an in-person visit.

Synchronous vs. Asynchronous Telehealth

ReviveHealth providers may deliver both asynchronous and synchronous telehealth. Asynchronous telehealth is the delivery of telehealth through asynchronous communication. Asynchronous communication is often referred to as “store-and-forward” communication, where patients and providers transmit information to each other to be viewed and responded to later. For example, asynchronous telehealth involves sending photos, video, or other communications via email or text message. “Asynchronous” means “not occurring at the same time” and is different from “synchronous” telemedicine, which generally includes visits conducted in real-time between patients and healthcare practitioners through audio or video means (e.g., live phone calls or videoconferencing). Healthcare practitioners may use asynchronous telemedicine to aid in diagnoses and medical consultations when live communication or face-to-face contact is not possible or necessary.

If you choose to receive mental health treatment through ReviveHealth, you will communicate with your provider via audio-only telephone calls. For medical visits with a physician, you will have the option to communicate via asynchronous text message or synchronous telephone or video chat. If your physician determines the method you choose is insufficient to address your condition(s), your physician may request you use a different method of communication better suited to your needs.

What are the Possible Risks Associated with Telehealth?

As with any healthcare service, there are potential risks associated with receiving care via telehealth. ReviveHealth believes that the likelihood of these risks materializing is very low, but we want to make sure you understand them before using our services.

These risks may include, without limitation, the following:

- Delays in medical evaluation and consultation or treatment may occur due to deficiencies or failures of the equipment or the Internet, which may include poor data quality, Internet outages, or other service interruption issues. You may reschedule your visit with your healthcare provider should these interruptions occur.
- Security protocols could fail, causing a breach of privacy of personal medical information.
- Because ReviveHealth does not have access to your complete medical records, if you do not disclose to your healthcare practitioner a full list of your medical history including diagnoses, treatments, medications/supplements, and allergies, adverse treatment, drug interactions or allergic reactions, or other negative outcomes may occur.

- The ReviveHealth™ telehealth services are NOT emergency services and your Personal Data (as defined in the ReviveHealth Privacy Policy) WILL NOT BE MONITORED 24/7. If you think you are experiencing a medical emergency, CALL 911 IMMEDIATELY.

The care you receive through ReviveHealth will be at the sole discretion of the healthcare practitioner who is treating you, with no guarantee of diagnosis, treatment, or prescription. Your provider will determine whether or not the condition being diagnosed and/or treated is appropriate for the care provided through a telehealth encounter via the ReviveHealth platform.
